Narrator:

Listen to a conversation between two students.

Female student:

Hey, Mat! You got your paper done for class today?

Male student:

No, I just realized it's sitting on my desk. I wrote it last night, but I forgot to bring it with me.

Female student:

Ah-oh, so what are you gonna do?

Male student:

Well, I could drive home and get it. I live off-campus. But if I hurry, I'd probably get home and bring the paper back before class was over. You know how strict she is about late submissions.

Female student:

Yeah, but you'd miss part of the class.

Male student:

I know.

Female student:

Maybe you could talk to the professor. Explain what happened and ask her if you could send it later by email.

Male student:

I know, but I'd have to do it after class, 'cause she always starts class right on time. There wouldn't be time to talk to her until after class.

Female student:

Well, why don't you do that and hope she doesn't consider the paper late?
